

March 27, 2009

Greetings from Illinois Institute of Technology (IIT)!

We are pleased to announce the Institute of Psychology Book Award Program for the 2009-10 academic year. The book award will be presented to an outstanding 11th or 12th grade student with an interest in the field of psychology.

Founded in 1890, IIT is a Ph.D.-granting technological university that awards undergraduate degrees in architecture, business, the humanities, engineering, math, science, the social sciences, and psychology. IIT's interprofessional, technology-focused curriculum prepares the university's more than 2,500 undergraduate students for leadership roles in an increasingly complex and culturally diverse global workplace.

Our mission is to advance knowledge through research and scholarship, cultivate invention improving the human condition, and educate students from throughout the world for a life of professional achievement, service to society, and individual fulfillment.

In keeping with our mission, Illinois Institute of Technology would like to have the opportunity to honor a student in the junior or senior class at your high school whose academic record and character are exceptional and who has an interest in psychology. The selection of the student is to be determined by your department.

Please return the enclosed reply form immediately after the recipient has been selected. This form can also be completed and submitted online by going to http://www.iit.edu/undergrad\_admission/programs/bookaward.php.
